Fantasy premier league gameweek 5 captain

Image not available for Colour: © 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its branches Beautiful, elegant, comfortable carpet. We bought 'Carlos Felted Wool Flatweave Rug Grey Natural' and I like it. It looks so good that even my friends bought the same one. I highly recommend it! Dear Kirilee, thank you so much for inspecting the carpet you bought from us. We are pleased to hear that you are satisfied with the purchase. We hope you will enjoy many more years. Thank you for sharing some photos of your carpet. It's wonderful to see in this room! Thank you so much for shopping with Rugs Of Beauty – we really appreciate your support! Who is the best captain of FPL Gameweek 5? Our resident FPL captain Chris Tan can take a look at the traits, the poll and the breakdown of the stats before he can make his best pick for the tape. Check out our Ultimate Guide to FPL Gameweek 5 for all the key information and tips you need for the weekend. FPL First Four Gameweek Recap We've had four weeks of data now, and the results have been heavily influenced by opposition power, here are the current values: FPL Gameweek 5 Captain - League Table It's worth noting that the format can change very quickly, and if it is often reset after the international break, especially for top teams where most of their teams play for the national side. However, here is the current league review: Everton - you could argue that fixtures breed form, and Everton have had a fairly nice run so far. Tottenham were not finished in the opener, but both Crystal Palace and Brighton started the season fairly well. In general, given their form, their manager's pedigree and the fact that they are not in Europe, it seems prudent to invest in one of their assets. Rodriguez (£7.8m) and Calvert-Lewin (£7.6m) look to have the best options. Aston Villa - missed their first fixture but have so far had a perfect record (with Liverpool's match fresh in our minds), have scored only a goal less than Everton (in total scores of 3.67 goals per game) and have allowed only two goals. The last side to finish in 17th place and then win the top three was Leicester when they won the title. There is certainly plenty of opportunities for negotiations here; Martinez (£4.6m), Grealish (£7.0m), Watkins (£5.9m) and potentially Barkley (5.9m pounds). Ollie Watkins looked electric against champions Leicester - they're talking about the devil, so far they're very Jekyll and Hyde, even though the results flattered them that they had cheated. Without Maddison they lacked creativity and Vardy relied ed er. In general, it's to wait and see for me. After the break they will have a perfectly fit squad, but not too far with Pereira. I expect them to be in the top six and there will be a lot of chances. For now, Castagne (£5.7m) is my choice. He seems to be a great attacking defender. Arsenal - signed an incredible central player on deadline day, but I'm not sure will help a lot in their creativity. Arteta drilled them well. They're hard to beat, but they don't create a lot of chances and they rarely look like they've blown somebody away. That could change if they move Aubameyang (£11.9million) to the switchboard and bring Pepe back into the pretis. Given that they don't have any FPL assets that I'm interested in at the moment, and I wouldn't feel confident as an Arsenal player. Liverpool – had the perfect start and all there was talk of tripling up. With other top teams stuttering, Liverpool seemed such a reliable option. Then they attacked Villa. Alisson was injured (Klopp said he would definitely miss Everton's game, he could have missed more), Thiago and Mane got covid-19, but this was still a strong Liverpool side. Adrian always gets the blame, but he was only guilty of one of the seven goals scored. Villa have been allowed to exploit Alexander-Arnold and Gomez for not putting enough pressure on the forwards, but it will be interesting to see if any other side will follow suit (although I expect Klopp to address that). Despite the result, Salah (£12.2m) still went 13 points when he was again re-inged when he played without Mane, and continues to show why he is the most reliable captain. Alexander-Arnold and Liverpool will be hoping to return to tottenham's winning ways - after a poor start against Everton. It is true that their two stellar performances came against the sides they attacked and fought against Newcastle (although they created a multitude of chances before they took down Son). But I've been very impressed so far, especially with Son (9.0m) and Kane (£10.6m). Chelsea - they looked like an awkwardly composed team of stars but the addition of a new goalkeeper, combined with the presence of Azpilicueta, and Silva's experience look to be a quiet ship. Pulisic (£8.3m) and Ziyech (£7.9m) should be fully fit on their return, but finally they should see the front four together. Like Leicester, it's waiting and looking for me, but I won't be surprised to see people being loaded as soon as they show signs of what they are capable of. Leeds - they are so much fun to watch, and are able to score against anyone because they are fearless in attack. However, their style of play leaves them open and I don't see them getting many clean sheets in this league because they won't be able to dominate possession like they did in the Championship. That's why I prefer their attacking options, but they don't have anyone to stand out for me. I'd also be happy to see the captain of someone playing against them, given how open the game will be. Newcastle - get a lot of tough press but they have made some great signings and they started the season fine. Pre-season we were all eyeing up Saint-Maximin (£5.3m), and if he plays as number 10 then it will be a great option. One player who has but it's Wilson (£6.4m). I foolishly disposed of it on my wildcard. He's so consistent. His movement is excellent, he's carrying the attack in Newcastle, his team-mate Fraser will supply him and he's on penalties. Newcastle started the season brightly at West Ham - several expected to be contenders for the game, but then Moyes started working from home and it looks like they are replicating their form from the remaining. Early in the season, a lot of punches on Soucek (£4.9million), which always looks so threatening but not yet scored. Bowen (£6.3m) is on red hot form after returning for the last two games. The only striker I'm interested in is their talisman (and potential penalty taker) Antonio (£6.3), who has soathed despite the difficult fixtures. Interestingly, their defensive statistics are also excellent, and they also have plenty of options for negotiations, such as Masuaku (£4.5m). Southampton - they have had a mixed start, performing fine against weaker teams, but they are struggling to create a lot of chances. That's why I'm not a fan of their attackers right now. They like to put a lot of pressure on the opposition on the pitch, which makes them very vulnerable, as Spurs have shown, and I expect Chelsea to do something similar. I'd be happy to target them with the captaincy option. Crystal Palace - they surprised some with the first two results but seem to have re-typed in the last two (against strong opposition). Mitchell (£4.1million) currently seems like a decent defender of value (but be warned that Van Aanholt has returned and could lose his place), and Palace are never easy to score against. They lack a lot of threat in attack, but they are turning around, so it could be worth hitting Zaha (£7.2m). Zaha could be on points with some excellent upcoming wolves fixtures - they haven't looked good this season, except for the first game. The net clearly doesn't connect very well with Jimenez (£8.6m), their defence doesn't look so solid and they don't create many chances. However, the new guy Semedo (5.5mm) should help things, and I'm sure Nuno will turn things around. But for now, I'd like to give a few games before moving on to any of their players. Man City - it was a strange summer for City, we crashed out of the Champions League, we looked at Messi, and we didn't do anything exciting in the transfer market. Then we opened the season with a demolition against Wolves, and it looked like everything was fine again. But the reality struck against Leicester and to a certain extent against Leeds. Desperately in need of a fit striker, Agueiro (£10.4m) is not too far away, but it usually takes him some time to get up to speed. Our left-back is our Achilles heel, which more and more teams are taking advantage of. Despite these shortcomings, they are still arguably the best attacking side in the league. The repairs are not great, and it is no longer mandatory to own a City striker. Brighton – have so far they play good football and defend relatively well (as opposed to what their results have shown). By turning their permanent stuff around, I expect them to start to be rewarded for their performances so far. Lamptey (£4.7m) is my favourite defender at that price. Trossard (£6.0m) is hugely influential and seems not to be spinning this season, and Maupay (£6.6m) is on penalties and acts like their Diego Costa. Lamptey was very impressive in the opening Gameweeks of Man United - just don't look right at the moment. However, it is not possible to determine whether there is an error on the players or the manager, but in any case, if the results are not approved, then I can see the change being made. They wouldn't be looking to target them yet (despite the fact that they have scored the same amount of goals as Fulham). I also wouldn't want to invest in any of their attackers until they started playing the way they did at the end of last season. West Brom - in my opinion, these are the best opposition to the captain. They fight for goals because they don't have a quality striker and they leave for fun. Burnley - not all right here, they haven't signed any decent players in the window, their captain is injured and the atmosphere seems off. I wouldn't object to the captain he's playing, because their famously watertight defence doesn't look bulletproof so far. From an aggressive point of view, they don't create anything. Sheffield Utd - the loss of Henderson and O'Connell is huge. With a few decisions, they were desperately unhappy and there is a chance that Brewster (£4.5m) could secure the goals they wanted. However, Sheffield Utd has looked bad so far, for now I would have avoided their players and would have been happy if my attackers had faced them. Fulham - much like West Brom, these were absolute whipping boys. But they signed a few new defenders, Lookman (£5.0m) was electric against Wolves and Loftus-Cheek (£5.9m) is an excellent signing on loan. This will certainly help Mitrovic (£5.9m) who has been starved of the job. For now, I'd still like to target them, but we could surprise a few people. Mitrovic could come good with the new attacking talent around him How have we done it to this day? FPL Gameweek 5 Captain - Our performance This has been a terrible start so far! It seems to me that Salah is the only premium asset we can trust. It's incredibly frustrating, given the record amount of goals scored, but hardly any of the main candidates returning, and perhaps it might be time to consider some non-premium assets. FPL Gameweek 5 Captain - The Fixtures FPL Gameweek 5 Captain - Fixtures Twitter/@FFH_HQ FPL Gameweek 5 Captain Poll Who do our Twitter followers think he is the best FPL Gameweek 5 captain? Hub Twitter GW5 Captain Poll Old Hunting Grounds – does any of the boys have a good history against their opposition? FPL Gameweek 5 Captain - Past Performance of Vardy (£10.1m) – I only included since last season, as the Villa side has played before it has been fundamentally different. You could argue that the same goes for some other match ups, but this was the most obvious. Last season, he topped a brace in both brackets. Villa have stepped up a lot, but they wouldn't bet against nailing it. Sterling (£11.5m) - he has an excellent record against Arsenal and returns two goals and an assist at home. I would have thought he had missed the international break with an injury (or he could have just been a resting place). Kane (£10.6m) - everyone, including me, is sticking to get it. But West Ham currently have the best defensive position in the league. Still, we wouldn't have stood against Harry on that form, and most of his goals (6) came home. Son (£9.1million) - similar to Kane - is a very popular man. So far, he has managed to score a goal and three assists at home, but their roles seem to have turned around and I wouldn't be surprised to see Kane assing Son. De Bruyne (£11.6mm) - he certainly enjoys his home-grown comfort. He hit three and helped home once. But he had to get out of Belgium's last game and touch and leave for the weekend. Grealish (£7.1million) - Villa have been much weaker in the past, yet Grealish still managed to score a goal at home and away against Leicester. Salah (£12.2m) - he has never scored at Goodison Park. Members of stats breakdown – FPL Gameweek 5 Captain This state have pulled out of the Fantasy Football Hub OPTA Stats tool, which is available to all members to help you analyze players and teams. Frankly, you can't read too much into these stats from the four Gameweek pattern, especially since opposition power plays a big factor. It will take at least four weeks (from all sides) before we get anything meaningful and even then there is a small sample. What we can do is use these stats in combination with an eye test to help us make decisions. I showed them as appearance because some teams/players played the game less. Individual players' stats
